Appraisal of records in the National Archives' custody

The process used to appraise the Commonwealth records that are in the custody of the National Archives is based on the methodology for Designing and Implementing Recordkeeping Systems (DIRKS) outlined in the Australian Standard AS4390-1996, Records Management, Part 1: General, Clause 1.3, and expanded in the DIRKS Manual.

The DIRKS methodology has been adapted to take into account a number of factors that are relevant in reviewing the status of a body of records that have been created some time before the appraisal takes place. Such records will usually represent only a small sample of the total records created by the organisation and there may not always be sufficient information available to provide a thorough understanding of the context in which the records were created.

Although the focus of the appraisals are initially on the records in Archives' custody, if other relevant records are also identified in agency custody at the time, they are also included in the scope of the appraisal.

Once the functional context has been ascertained, the National Archives determines those records that it considers need to be retained as national archives in accordance with the appraisal objectives identified in the National Archives' publication, Why Records are Kept: Directions in Appraisal. Stakeholder interests are also investigated to establish if there is a continuing need for the records or whether they can be destroyed. This disposal authority is produced as a result of this analysis and investigation.

Disposal authorisation

Section 24 of the Archives Act 1983 provides that records are not to be disposed of without the consent of the Archives unless the action of disposal is positively required by law, or takes place in accordance with a normal administrative practice of which the Archives does not disapprove. Advice on the provisions of the Archives Act can be obtained from any National Archives office.

Purpose of this authority

This authority authorises the destruction or other disposal of Commonwealth records as required by the Archives Act and may also contain descriptions of records to be retained as national archives.

It should be used in conjunction with the Administrative Functions Disposal Authority issued by the National Archives to cover housekeeping and other administrative records common to most Commonwealth agencies.

Using this authority

This authority covers records controlled by the agency and applies only to the records or classes of records described in the authority, whether they are in the Archives' or agency custody, provided that the records are within the scope of the original appraisal. If similar records are found after the appraisal has been completed, care should be taken in ascertaining whether this authority is appropriate to use for those records.

There are minimum retention periods set down in this authority. The agency may extend the retention period if it considers that there is an administrative need to do so. Records already sentenced as 'retain permanently' using previous Records Disposal Authorities (RDAs) that are covered by this authority should now be re-sentenced using this authority.
Amendment of this authority
All amendments or variations to the classes in this authority must be approved by the National Archives of Australia. Officers using this authority should discuss any problems in application with the agency Records Manager.
